Natural ingredients are the key to success with younger pet owners

The difference in interest in all natural foods between younger and older pet owners is significant, and in terms of organic ingredients, the difference is even more pronounced with some 25% of pet owners aged 18-34 rating organic ingredients as a significant purchase factor, compared to just 9% of owners aged over-55.

In the 12 months to February 2020, the 'all natural' and organic product claims featured in some 15% and 3% of NPD in pet food and pet product NPD in North America respectively. They have seen steadily rising levels of NPD over the past five years.

Pet owners want the best for their pets, but are skeptical of health claims

- While pet owners are likely to agree that it's important to feed their pet the highest quality pet food, many approach the pet food aisle with a degree of skepticism.
- US consumers agree that they are skeptical of the claims that most pet foods make, underscoring the importance of information and transparency in pet food marketing. While marketers may be inclined to add more health claims to pet food packaging, making multiple claims compelling and believable is more of a challenge.

Mood food concepts have further potential in pet food

- Botanical ingredients for stress/sleep issues: Pet foods made with botanical ingredients – eg calming herbs and adaptogens, which are rich in vitamins, minerals, and amino acids required for inhibitor neurotransmitter synthesis – will appeal to pet owners looking for functional foods to ease their pets' stress and improve their sleep.
- Holistic health: Consumers' quest for more natural remedies and a holistic approach to their own and pets' lives opens up opportunities for pet food products based on natural remedies and ancient medicinal approaches such as traditional Chinese medicine, Jamu and Ayurveda.

Dog Treats

The Bear & The Rat Bacon & Peanut Butter Flavored Frozen Yogurt Dog Treat is made with real yogurt and is formulated with Optagest boost, which contains prebiotics and digestive enzymes (US).

Functional health claims become increasingly common on pet food and treat packaging

Roughly 40% of pet food and treat products make at least one on-pack functional health claim. While many claims revolve around teeth, skin, and coat, a wide range of other health concerns are addressed as well. The increasing presence of functional health claims responds to pet owners' focus on their pets' health, but may also make it more difficult for individual brands to set themselves apart.

Tackling Food Waste with Upcycled Ingredients

Using upcycled ingredients and reducing the environmental footprint of pet food can help manufacturers to operate in a more ecologically responsible way – something consumers want to see.

In the US, Shameless Pets has launched a range of dog treats made from ingredients which otherwise would have been discarded. From apple pulp sourced from cideries, to lobster shells from canneries, Shameless Pets claims that up to 40% of the ingredients in its products are upcycled.

Fun Fact about us:

Upcycling is near and dear to Tree Top. In fact, Tree Top was started as a way to give a home to homeless fruit or fruit that might otherwise have gone to waste. Since 1960 – well before the term upcycling originated around 2000 – Tree Top was taking fruit unsuitable for the fresh market and turning it into delicious and nutritious fruit products and ingredients.
